SAN DIEGO, Calif. – (Oct. 17, 2017) – San Diego artist, Tom Liguori, announces the addition of new signature holographic paintings and sculptures to his permanent collection. Stunning and unique, these pieces use large-format holography and a technique which has yet to be replicated. They are designed to engage both the left and right brain and play with light, movement and depth perception.

“The holographic pieces capture three dimensions in a two-dimensional art form, and are inspired by psychology, nature and science,” said Liguori. “Much like life, what you see really depends upon the position that you view things from.”

Adding to the uniqueness of these creations is not only their appeal to both aficionados of art and science, but the fact that Liguori uses his art to give back to the community. When collectors purchase a Tom Liguori Art piece, they are encouraged to make the full payment directly to one or more of the supported charities; Rady Children’s Hospital, Gary Sinise Foundation and Mercy Ships.

For those seeking more information or a closer look at these creations, a new website, TomLiguoriArt.com, has just launched. The site offers visitors a photo gallery as well as a dynamic video of Tom Liguori showcasing the creation of one of his holographic pieces. For a deeper understanding of this unique medium, an in-person viewing is a must. Newly opened, the Tom Liguori Art gallery, Dimensions, welcomes visitors Tuesday through Sunday as well as by appointment, and is located at 789 West Harbor Drive, San Diego, CA 92101.

About Tom Liguori Art

Tom Liguori is a San Diego based entrepreneur and artist. His artwork is the result of years spent developing techniques which incorporate holographic plates, capturing three dimensions in a two-dimensional art form. He has pledged all proceeds from his creations to various 501(c)(3) organizations including Rady Children's Hospital, the Gary Sinise Foundation and Mercy Ships.
